PYRAMIDS AND THE PENTAGON

By Nick Redfern

Were the mighty pyramids of Egypt, the famous standing stones that comprise England's famous Stonehenge and the many huge stone structures of both Central America and South America built via the use of nothing less than anti-gravity and levitation-based technology? As controversial as such a scenario sounds, evidence presented in Nick Redfern's The Pyramids and the Pentagon reveals that, for decades, U.S. Government agencies have secretly taken a great deal of interest in this theory – even to the point of trying to understand and harness the technology for military use.

Has the U.S. Government found the remains of Noah's legendary Ark that, the Bible tells us, came to rest on Mount Ararat, Turkey, after the wild, turbulent and legendary flood? And what of the possibility that the Ark may not have been a huge vessel of the seas, after all, but instead, a highly advanced, futuristic spacecraft built on another world? These are among the many questions Nick Redfern asks in his new book, The Pyramids and the Pentagon, as he addresses the big mystery of: What does the U.S. Government really know about Noah's Ark?

Does the controversial, so-called Face on Mars represent the last-standing remains of a once-mighty Martian culture that flourished, and died, millennia ago? What of the curious Pyramid-like structures that can be seen near the huge, Egyptian Sphinx-like face? Is it possible that, incredibly, there might be a connection between the now-extinct Martians and the early people of Egypt? Did the last vestiges of a Martian civilization make a dicey attempt to save small numbers of their race by fleeing to Earth and starting over in what, today, is Egypt? And what does the U.S. Government know of all this? As Nick Redfern's new book, The Pyramids and the Pentagon, shows, far more than you might think, that's what!
