

PSYCHIC INTUITION

By Nancy du Tertre

Story Angles

Headline: Psychic ability is not a genetic “gift” and everyone can be trained to be psychic

Paragraph: Most people assume that you must be born with a psychic gift or you will never be psychic. Psychic ability is viewed as a kind of genetic inheritance or mutation, and is rarely regarded as a normal human ability. Could you actually read someone’s thoughts? Could you predict the future? Could you speak with your deceased relatives? The answer is yes. The book demonstrates how we are all capable of learning how to be psychic. We have to return to certain mental processes involving the holistic approach of the right hemisphere of the brain that we have unconsciously “unlearned” during our lifetime of focusing on language, logic and communication. Once we appreciate how much we prejudge our senses and our thoughts, we become open to receiving strangely accurate psychic information without any effort on our part. The book shows the reader how to reclaim his or her natural birthright of being able to be psychic!

Headline: Women are more psychic than men because they have superior senses

Paragraph: Almost everyone has heard the expression “women’s intuition” when referring to the uncanny ability of women to seemingly know things that are unseen or unknown to others. Generally, this is attributed to their ability to read people psychologically. In fact, women’s intuition is hard-wired into their gender. As a group, women have more acute senses of sight, sound, touch, taste and smell than their male counterparts. This accounts for their ability to access information that seems “invisible” to others and even to know things in advance. The book explains how the entire sensory network of women is far more sensitive to subtle electromagnetic vibrations and chemical impulses, so they are able to get what seems like impossible information about the world.

Headline: Psychic ability is a neurological condition

Paragraph: Many people have accused psychics and mediums of being slightly crazy! This simply isn't true. Psychics are not crazy. Psychic sensing, including clairvoyant visions, hearing voices, and seeing ghosts, is not the same thing as having mental hallucinations. The book shows how every form of psychic sensing can be distinguished from psychotic hallucinations, schizophrenic delusions, and even temporary sensory confusion experienced by every human being. The book points out that the condition of having psychic ability is actually much closer to two other neurological conditions involving hyper-sensitized access to data: autistic savantism and synesthesia. Autistic savants (like the famed "Rain Man" Kim Peek) have an ability to perform certain feats with uncanny speed and accuracy, while synesthetes experience events simultaneously in two senses such as the ability to "see" sounds as colors or shapes. Psychic ability actually shares many common characteristics with both of these neurological conditions. Scientists have shown that savantism can be triggered in the laboratory in "normal" people, and synesthesia is now believed to be present to some degree in almost all "normal" people. Similarly, the book proposes that psychic ability is a neurological condition present in almost all "normal" people.

Headline: How Being "Psychic" Can Help You in Your Profession or Job

Paragraph: Did you ever feel no matter how much training, expertise and study you have done in your profession or job, you just couldn't seem to master the field completely? Is it difficult to outshine your colleagues? Do others seem to have some magical ability to "fly by the seat of their pants" even when they don't know all the answers leaving you behind in the dust? There is a reason for this and you can fix it. Rational, reasonable, sensible thinking will only get you so far. The book shows you how to develop your intuitive and psychic skills in such a way that transcends mastery of any specific skill. Whether you are a plumber, a teacher, a police officer, or a lawyer, you can improve your professional abilities by learning to become psychic!
